WHAT OUR CUSTOMERS ARE SAYING

“I have been a safety professional for several years, and as such, have purchased every type of safety gear the market has to offer. It’s extremely frustrating to spend the time and money on safety gear, just to have the workers either not wear it because they don’t like it, or wear it for a week and have it fall apart.

What initially caught my eye with Blaklader was the wide variety of styles that I knew my workers would love. The quality is amazing, and the workers have loved them. Most importantly, they’ve stood the test of time. I will never purchase another workwear brand!”

—Program Safety Manager

“Wearing Blaklader has completely changed the way I and my employees operate on the job-site. We carry all our tools with us, so we can stay more productive and take less trips back to the truck. It’s saved my company money and billable time. Plus, we look more professional for our customers.”

—Small Business General Contractor

BECAUSE TOMORROW MATTERS

Sustainability has always been part of our story. Since Blåkläder began in 1959, we've been making sustainable workwear. The awareness of sustainability issues has increased over time and it now permeates every aspect of our global organization.

We believe in sustainability. Because tomorrow matters.

SUSTAINABLE FREIGHT IS ACHIEVED WITH FULL LOADS

We know that our shared global environment is impacted by our freight transport operations. We therefore ensure that all containers leaving the factories where Blåkläder's garments are produced are filled to the maximum possible volume.

Working with a few carefully chosen factories and monitoring quality throughout the supply chain are reasons we are able to do this. Good planning and coordination are also key in enabling us to use transport options that are less expensive and less carbon intensive, for example, sea rather than air. Our optimized logistics processes and automated warehouse operations in Svenljunga also enable us to monitor and control the quality of our garments. This allows our customers to focus on their business and receive just-in-time deliveries of workwear without unnecessary delays. That's what we call sustainable.

We are aware of the discussions about the role and importance of plastic, and for us, it is always a balancing act. We use plastic to prevent contamination during transportation, storage, and handling, and to protect against moisture during shipping and storage. If we didn't use plastic bags to protect the garments, there is a risk they would become soiled, or damaged by dampness and mildew, and would need to be scrapped as not fit for use. The carbon footprint of a plastic bag is far less than the cost to the environment of manufacturing an item of clothing. Consequently, from a sustainability perspective, it is easy to justify using hundreds of plastic bags, even if it stops just one t-shirt from going to waste. Naturally, all our plastic bags can be recycled.

We also ensure that cardboard packing boxes are dealt with responsibly. At present, 60% of cardboard used in production is reused.

SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

IN BLÅKLÄDER'S PRODUCTION PROCESS

Sustainability is an incredibly broad and important topic. For many, the term sustainability probably brings to mind the environmental aspects. But it is so much more than that. The socially sustainable practices of the factories producing the garments are extremely important to Blåkläder, and we have already accomplished a great deal in this area.

It cannot be stressed enough just how important it is for everyone to do the right things from a social sustainability perspective. This is important for employees of Blåkläder and especially so for the men and women who make the clothes in the six factories in Sri Lanka and in Myanmar. So what action is being taken to create a socially sustainable and responsible work environment in these production facilities? A great deal is being done, of course. Below, we present some of the main attributes that make the production of Blåkläder clothes so highly respected.

The staff at our factories all have stable employment. Blåkläder and the factories have close working relationships and this helps to keep production at constant levels. This differs from other garment sewing factories where it is not unusual for staff to be sent home without pay or job security when there is a drop in order volumes. All of our factories have an on-site medical facility staffed by a nurse and with regular visits from the company doctor. The facilities provide employees with medical care for everything from colds to antenatal check-ups. There are also agreements with nearby hospitals for medical emergencies.

The factories provide local support in the form of crisis counseling, supporting local organizations, community-building initiatives and other activities and projects. Donations are given to those who are in most need of help, including local orphanages. There is considerable local community engagement from each factory and it is extremely important to encourage this involvement. Local traditions and festivals are celebrated together at the factories, to promote a sense of cohesion and belonging among the employees.

The factories provide meals that are either free or subsidized. Free bus transportation to and from work is also available. Although education is free, school books have to be paid for. So the employees' children are given the books and reading material they require. Students and student projects are also supported in many other ways.

Although we have come a long way, the journey is by no means complete.

Blåkläder works constantly and with never-ending determination to integrate social responsibility into all aspects of its production operations around the world. Although we have come a long way, the journey is by no means complete since there are no quick fixes for the challenges that exist. In order to do things properly, they shouldn't be rushed, and that is how Blåkläder intends to proceed.

INTO ETERNITY

The sun has a special significance for the people who live in the cold Nordic countries. It gives us strength and energy which we spread to all parts of our worldwide organization.

Most of the millions of garments that Blåkläder produces every year come from the factories in Sri Lanka and in Myanmar. Solar panels on the roofs of these factories generate almost half the electricity required for the manufacturing operations. Solar energy drastically reduces carbon dioxide emissions and is both environmentally-friendly and cost-effective – we call it sun-win.

As we see it, sustainability is not just about the final garments, but is about every step on the journey. After 60 years in the business, one of our insights is that you do what you can to produce in a sustainable manner. We, therefore, spent years examining how we could reduce energy consumption at our facilities while still meeting our exacting quality standards.

The sun as a natural source of energy was quite simply a brilliant idea. As well as the solar panels that power the factories, the roofs of the production buildings are fitted with what are known as prismatic skylights. These let natural sunlight into the interiors, while the UV radiation and heat are kept out. Automated sensors activate LED lighting when it is overcast or dark outside. The result is reduced electricity consumption and a brighter and more pleasant workplace.

We can produce twice the amount of energy from a modern solar panel array than was possible just a decade ago, which made it an easy decision. We are continually increasing our use of renewable electricity as a future energy source. It is also an important indicator that our efforts to become the most sustainable global player in the market are effective – and we aim to ensure it stays that way, today and going forward.
